5.	Every success of the French Expeditionary Corps helps weaken the morale of the Malay rebels. The latter have long believed in an eventual victory of Vietminh. They have, therefore, exhausted themselves in guerrilla warfare, to such an exter that Chang Peng, head of the Malayan Communists, has had to slow down military operations. In addition to that, he has even been forced to condemn certain form of terrorism. Huddled together in the jungle, the Malayan Communists are now carrying on guerrilla war only within a limited district around Johore, Perak and Pahang. Even this fight is more or less a symbol and is hardly disturbing. Chang Peng has, in fact, been forced to adopt a policy of clandestine penetration into the syndicates and into the Chinese community of the Peninsula. In abandon armed conflict, he himself recognizes the check suffered by his rebellion. He can certainly help corrupt the nationalist organizations of the Left, but that	ns n
